A Stage Just for Them:

Each child came forward to present a short talk on one of the six fun and familiar topics such as Healthy Food, My Favourite Toy, My Family, My School, My Favourite Fruit, My Favourite Animal. With adorable confidence, they spoke about their favourite things, the children came prepared with handmade props, charts, toys, and real-life items that helped them express their ideas clearly and confidently. It was heartening to see the creativity and effort put in by both the students and their parents. Whether it was a student describing mangoes and pineapples or a proud little one talking about their favourite car, and animal every presentation brought smiles and applause. From colorful fruit baskets and fruit cutouts to miniature vehicles and drawings of family members, the visual appeal of the event added charm and engagement to each presentation.

A Joyful Audience:

It wasn't just the participants who shined. Their classmates in the audience were equally cheerful, clapping, laughing, and encouraging each speaker with wide eyes and big hearts. It was heartwarming to see such genuine encouragement and connection among such young learners.

SUBJECT INTEGRATED:

What Children Learn Through Show and Tell:

Though it looks like a simple speaking activity, Show and Tell beautifully brings together many learning areas that are important for young children at this stage.

- Language Skills: When a child talks about their toy or fruit, they're not just speaking—they're learning how to form sentences, use new words, and express their thoughts clearly. It's real, practical language learning.
- General Knowledge (EVS): Kids start making connections to the world around them. Whether it's naming fruits, talking about their family members, or describing their school they're learning about their everyday environment in a meaningful way.
- Art and Creativity: Many children bring in handmade props or colourful drawings. That's where imagination meets learning. They use art to support what they say, which helps them express ideas better.

- Social and Emotional Growth: Standing up in front of friends and sharing something personal builds courage. And when they clap for each other it reflects empathy and social bonding. It helps them feel heard, seen, and valued.
- Thinking and Memory: Planning what to say, remembering the order, and using the right words all of that helps develop memory and clear thinking.

In actuality, Show and Tell is more than just a fun class event. It's a wonderful way to help children grow in confidence, curiosity, and connection—all while having a great time with their friends.

CONCLUSION:

A Successful Experience:

The event was a wonderful reminder of how capable, expressive, and thoughtful even our youngest learners can be when given the space to shine. Show and Tell gave them a safe, encouraging platform to explore language, emotions, and ideas, all while having fun with their friends. Such activities also help teachers assess the children's language proficiency, creativity, and overall development in an informal and joyful setting.

We are so proud of each participant for their efforts and thrilled to see such beautiful learning unfold through simple, joyful experiences. We look forward to creating many more moments like this in the future.
